LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

(address all letters for this column to THE EDITOR, Box M, c/o THE SPINNING WHEEL, Taneytown, Md.)

Dear Mrs. Smith:

Permit me to come to your defense, although this is hardly necessary on reading the ridiculous letter by Mrs. W.H.S., Pittsburgh (July issue). Your magazine could hardly be surpassed for format, high level of contributors, innovations, friendly, un-highbrow editorial tone, and unique standing among magazines in a highly restricted, limited field. Shows a high sense of humor to print her half-baked comment. C. R. B., Los Angeles, Calif.

Ed. Note: It is regrettable that we do not have space to print the many other replies similar to the one above. The loyalty of our many readers is greatly appreciated.

Dear Mrs. Smith:

I am sending check for a 3-year extension. I also want to tell you about the good luck my husband and I have had by advertising in your "Buy-Ways". THE SPINNING WHEEL came out one day and the very next day I made enough to pay for our ad and it is still paying off. That is, the people who have told me, "they saw it in THE SPINNING WHEEL". Many thanks and good luck to you. Mrs. W. O. S., Hampstead, Md.

Gentlemen:

Thank you folks for the fine ad 'set-up'. Congratulations, orders, wants, demands, and just letters are coming in beyond my wildest anticipation. I buried a son-in-law and sprained an ankle on my recent trip and am slowed down to a hobble-dog trot. Filling orders and answering mail becomes work under such conditions but I am making a terrific effort to get that next ad ready. M. K. A., Susanville, Calif.

Dear Sirs:

I just wanted to let you know of the great success I had in obtaining old and unusual playing cards through my ad put in your magazine in a recent issue. To date I have bought 25 decks, some very rare and old, and some lovely souvenir decks. The response to my ad far exceeded my expectations and I was very pleased. I do enjoy "THE SPINNING WHEEL" very much. Yours truly, Mrs. R. P., Sparta, Mich.

Dear Editor:

It is a pleasure to pay the increased rate of subscription on THE SPINNING WHEEL. Some of my most beautiful and interesting antique fans have been purchased from your advertisers, and I look forward to another year of pleasant collecting through your magazine. Also the gaining of information in many collective fields. Thank you, K. W. B., Aurora, Colorado.

Dear SPINNING WHEEL:

Enclosed is my check for subscription extension. Would not be without the improved magazine. Have every copy since it is published in my files and often refer to back numbers. Would like to see articles on badges, hat pins, buckles and buttons — my hobbies. I enjoy everything in THE SPINNING WHEEL and am looking forward to the next issues. Respectfully, A. D., Ephrata, Penna.

Gentlemen:

Enclosed find check for $5 for my renewal. After reading and enjoying the first issue of THE SPINNING WHEEL, we knew it would always be a "must" on our magazine list. Most sincerely, Mrs. R. L. D., Northumberland, Penna.

Dear Mrs. Smith:

It's a great day when the postman leaves THE SPINNING WHEEL. All activities cease until I glance through it. Later I read every word and take the keenest possible pleasure in both articles and ads. June issue, article on cameos was wonderful for I discovered I had one of the Rebecca's. I took it to my club and am sure it renewed the interest of the members in THE SPINNING WHEEL (Towson Womans Club). I congratulate you on its development. Sincerely, M. E. G., Baltimore, Maryland.

Dear Sir:

Enclose my check and ad for current issue—from now on I am an advertiser in THE SPINNING WHEEL. Never have I had so much mail from such a few words. At such a little expense—mail continues to come each day, from the four corners of the U. S. I really need a secretary and packer. I have shipped to all three coast lines and to the North. Thanking you most sincerely, L. W., Bentonville, Arkansas.

Grandmother's "Dominecker"

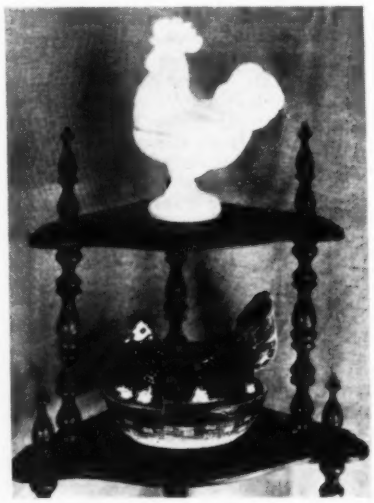
by Seletha A. Brown

EVEN as a child, I admired this dish which we called Grandmother's Dominecker Hen. There it rested on the marble-topped table, its full neck turned to the side, its tan and brown feathers mottled with white appearing so real that I thought they would ruffle in anger if I reached out to touch them.

Then Grandmother would lift the hen from her nest, and there was the milk-white gleam of the inside. What a delightful contrast to the pink peppermint or amber hore-hound candy which invariably filled the nest!

Later, when the beginning of things interested me, I asked, "Where did you get the Dominecker Hen, Grandmother?"

"Your Grandfather found it in a shop in Chicago, when he attended the Columbian Exposition in 1893. There were no eyes in the sockets when he bought the dish, but the dealer had a tray of various colored glass eyes from which Grandfather selected the pair he wished for the dealer to cement in place." That was a common practice in those days and accounts for one often finding molded animals with "sunken eyes" from which the glass eye is missing and is therefore, a sign of age.



Milk-white opaque rooster and Grandmother's Dominecker, examples of an art started over 4,000 years ago.

"In my childhood," Grandmother continued, "we lived near Grapeville, Pennsylvania, where the Westmoreland Manufacturing company was established. They made opaque glass dishes, many in the form of blue or white hens on a nest which were sold in carload lots to dealers the world over, mostly for filling with prepared mustard or packing in the breakfast-food boxes which were just beginning to come on the market."

As my interest in opaque glass continued, I learned that it had ever been popular with housewives of the new continent. Many early American glassmaker, Stiegel, Sandwich company, Bryce and Atterbury, produced dishes in yellow, green, red, black, turquoise, and white opalescent colors. And no wonder it was popular! The meld lent itself to infinite variety of texture, was often made to imitate heavy porcelain, or was spun as lacy pieces d'art.

Indeed, I came to think of Grandmother's Dominecker as an example of one of the oldest arts known to man. Gustavus A. Eisen in his book, GLASS, tells that fragments of the earliest glass which has been found were colored and opaque, probably from some metallic substance. This was natural because man had not yet learned to refine mixtures and produce clear glass.

From ancient wall painting, and from chards found in ancient cities, we know that Egyptians made colored glass centuries before Christ. Specimens have been found in Assyrian ruins, some very crude, others exquisite in shape and design. My-cennaeans, living on the Mediterranean islands, formed libation vessels from black crystal before Greek history began.

The Greeks knew how to make opaque glass, and although they did not develop this industry seriously, they influenced the early Romans. About the dawn of the Christian era Romans were mixing sand and potash-soda to form a colored glass in patterned molds. Pieces have been found where white opaque was backed with colored glass even at that early date.

When glass making reached the Venetians, about the fifth or sixth century, the tree of Opaque glass took firm root to yield a copius bloom about the eleventh century. These artisans used opaques independently and as contrast for colorless glass, but were most proud of their ability to blow thread like filaments of white glass entwining stems of tall sparkling drinking goblets.

Though the Venetians zealously tried to guard their secret, glass blowing and molding spread over Europe. About the time the Jamestown Colony was being established in America, glass factories were being established in Spain, France, Germany, Scandinavia, and the low countries. Each produced various colored opaques. Skilled workmen, decorating their glass after the manner of porcelain with gilding and enamels colors, wandered from factory to factory, from country to country. Thus, it is readily seen that without definite marking or known history, it is practically impossible to tell with assurance from what factory or country the surviving pieces originated.

In May, 1696, there were nine glass houses established about Bristol, England. All seemed to have blown opaques. Greatest energy, however, was expended in creating a heavy white mold, termed "enamel glass", which at first might be taken for fine glazed porcelain. This ware offered competition to the "china" trade from the Orient and Europe which was flooding English markets.

Front and side view of demi-john owned by Mr. & Mrs. Edward Simon. Treasured for its unusual design, the history and manufacturer baffles experts.

The gathering of such a collection, owned by Lucy Delbridge and Bessie Beeson of Greeley, Colo., adds zest to daily living and grace to a modern home. The large rabbit on the third shelf from the bottom is over 70 years old. The domed rabbit on the second shelf has been in one family for over 100 years.

All this time glass had been considered something for artists to produce for kings and queens, and the extreme wealthy to own. It was another hundred years before merchant's wives began dreaming of owning a few cherished pieces, yet in two hundred years from the time Bristol factories began production opaque glass was so commonplace that it could be bought for a few cents per glass or plate.

Yankee ingenuity and commercialism brought about much of this change. There is something about the color and texture of opaque glass that makes it indigenous to the North American scene. What type of dish looked more striking against a red or blue homespun cloth than a piece of milk-white glass?

As settlements spread westward in the new republic, industry kept pace. From New England and the Jersey coast, glass factories moved into Pennsylvania and the Ohio River valley. These enterprising companies sent their products down the river to New Orleans, and even sent their salesmen as far south as Mexico City to sell their wares. Let no one think these were crude products! Skilled

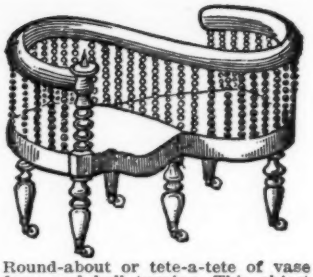
by Carl W. Drepperd



Round-about or tete-a-tete of vase form and ball turning. This object dates from the 1840's.

In my home village of Bronxville, New York, we have three banks. They're all good banks, well-heeled, so to speak, but still village banks. Even though they are not thirty miles from Wall Street their total assets, resources and such are never "news" for the financial pages of either the Wall Street Journal or the metropolitan dailies. But one of the banks, just yesterday, cracked the pages of the New York Herald Tribune with news and pictures about its newly decorated customers' room "done in the Victorian style, with genuine antiques."

There are high priests of taste in antiquaria who would sniff, snort and sputter at calling Victorian era things antique, but in spite of the sniffs, the snorts and the sputterings, there is an army of collectors gathering up what they call Victorian, and they, plus the passing of time, will make their collections antique. There is something of deep importance buried in this comment—the fact that publicity, and favorable publicity, can be achieved on the theme and beam of antiques collecting. For a bank to do its customers' room in Victorian antiques is "man-bites-dog" kind of news.

There are perhaps more people who think they understand the term "spool bed" than any other term in our antiques vocabulary. But they don't. What they think you mean if you say spool bed is a button, or ball-turned bed. Spool-turned beds are scarcer than Queen Anne chairs. Button-turned beds were made by the thousands annually for at least fifty years. The only difference is to be found in variations of turning pattern. A spool turner was a specific artisan; he turned spools on a lathe. He put lengths of maple in his lathe and, with shaping chisels, turned out a long piece of wood turned into spool forms, ready to be cut apart and used.

If you take a dozen empty thread spools and stand them on top of each other you have a short length of spool turning. But how many beds have you seen with such turning? Mighty few. Button-turned beds, and ball-turned beds? You have seen plenty! Button turning was also a specific vocation; the button turner turned lengths of nicely rounded, but clearly

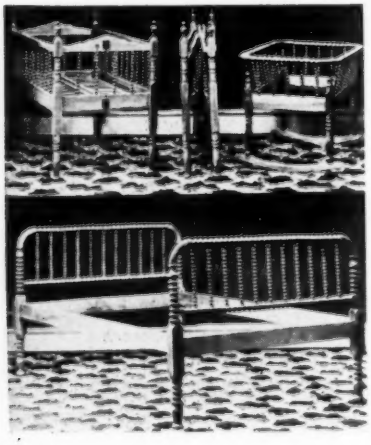
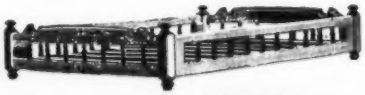
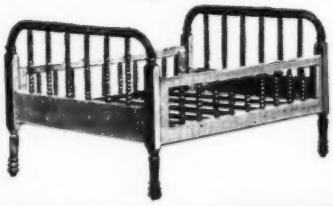
Three-quarter size ball and button-turned bed. This type of bed was made from the 1850's and, strangely enough, was still procurable in the 1890's. Above it is a ball and button-turned lounge. This is a much narrower "repose" piece as may be noted from the 5 spindles in the bows at the ends. The bed has 9 spindles.

Three cradles in ball and button-turning for poor babies, middle class babies and rich babies. The higher and fancier the ends, the more expensive the pieces. The platform rocker cradle was the last word and has the latest dating. It was produced from the 1870's; the other two from the 1850's.

(Top) The picture that started the Jenny Lind tradition. The Salisbury Furniture Company, which made the basket crib on rockers at the right of this group, called it the Jenny Lind crib. This is the only record we have of contemporaneous use of the term "Jenny Lind" in connection with ball and button-turned furniture. The date is 1866. The other object is a folding crib shown open and folded. (Bottom) Round corner button-turned bed with what the manufacturer called a "ladder head and foot". Salisbury Furniture Co.

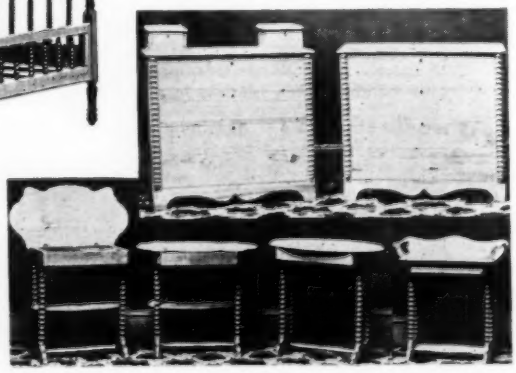






A ball and button-turned child's bed with sidepieces, and a trundle bed with inserts of ball turning.

Cottage bureaus with split button-turning applied to fronts as columns. Made by the Salisbury Furniture Company from 1860's to 1880's. All Salisbury furniture was either painted, stained and varnished, or painted for decoration.



(Right) Three teapoys by Salisbury, made from the 1860's to the 1880's. Ball and button-turned. These were frequently used as dressing tables. (Far right) Ball-turned wash stand by Salisbury.

accented, "hills and dales." These were cut apart to provide pellets which, also cut apart, became wooden button forms. The ball turning, a variant of button turning, might have also been used to make half round button molds. The button turner's form became a popular turning form for bedmakers and so, because the people liked the style, it went into nearly every American home.

How old is the spool, the button and the ball turning? Historically, and of record duly authenticated by examples, we had ball-turned furniture in the Pilgrim Century, from c. 1660. Spool-turned beds may date from the 1790's; spool-turned chair and table legs seem to have been made in the 1780's. Button-turned furniture seems to be chiefly a 19th century production, finally mass produced in a score or more of factories in every region or state from the 1830's to at least 1880. It is in this button-turned and ball-turned furniture and its history that we find lurking many oddities, some interesting facts, and the cure of certain of our misconceptions.

Not long ago one of my colleagues said to me, "It would seem that antiques collecting is becoming more and more general an avocation, and that it draws its devotees from every intelligence and economic level." I did what I was supposed to do, and said, "What do you mean?" He replied, "The same blithe misuse of terms, the same careless attributions, and the same habits of persisting in beliefs that have no foundation that are found in all people, are found in the collectors. Therefore the collectors must be a perfect sample of the whole; they are not sliced off a level which is made up of precisionists, intellectuals or pedants." "Do you think that is good or bad?" I asked. He thought it was all to the good.

But I do not agree. I have the altogether naive belief that when you become a collector you must assume certain obligations which are the price of any educational process. Collecting is an education. But then, my concept of education is quite simple. My firm belief, conviction, and even obsession, is that education should be an eternal course in how to think, and that it should never be a process of teaching people what to think. To attempt to tell folks, youth or adults, what to think is an attempt to control their minds.

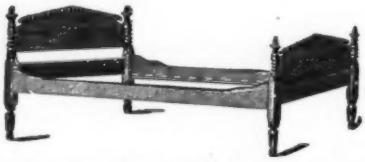
In respect of spool, button and ball-turned antiques it is our privilege and our duty to examine the objects closely and in particular, as well as our pleasure to enjoy them in general, as units for use. Look at the turnings. Examine early spools as well as spool turning. Examine early and late button molds or forms as well as button turning. Notice that spools had a hole big enough for a spindle through them, while buttons had no holes, or only one small hole, or a series of small holes for shanking or affixing with a sewing-through process after they were covered with cloth or other stuff. We should notice that while most buttons were turned of maple, birch or ash, spools were not always turned of these hard woods. Also, spool turning was a device used to produce spools for cotton thread, for pack thread, cording and even light rope. Which is to say spools were turned from six inch stuff, five inch, and so on down to one inch. Buttons were seldom more than two inches in diameter and often were made in half-inch size.



Bed with solid head and foot boards, but trimmed with applied button-turning. Offered as a "servant's bed" in the 1870's at $2.00 each. It was, of course, of cheap cabinet wood, painted. The better grades of ball and button-turned furniture were made of walnut and maple. The cheap grades were of poplar and fruit woods, stained or painted.

Spool turning, in lengths, is not exactly decorative. Button turning, and its near relative, ball turning, is decorative, cute, engaging, or whatever you want to call it. If we examine what we have been calling spool turning we will discover that nearly all of it is button or ball-turned in principle, but with baluster, vase, and other forms introduced for variation. And often there is reeding at the points where a bend was necessary in constructing the piece of furniture.

If we examine all the furniture of this general designation, we discover that some Empire styled chests of drawers had columns of split ball, or split button, turning applied at the sides. We find even quarter rounds sawed from button or ball turning applied as beading around drawers and under tops. We find towel racks fashioned of ball and button turning, teapoys, night stands, chairs, cradles, trundle beds, and beds of ball and button turning.

What we are apt to call a single bed in button and ball turning was once properly designated as a "lounge." Some were made to extend into bed size. We find ball and button-turned cradles, platform rocker cradles . . . in fact, in the ball and button-turned furniture we are apt to find anything. The exposition of pictures to accompany this essay is drawn from catalogs and advertisements of makers. Every picture is contemporaneous with the production; this is what the maker said he would deliver for so much. The dates range from 1844 to 1880. There is no appreciable difference between the furniture made in 1844 and 1880. With each picture here reproduced, the corresponding caption carries more quick facts than are generally given in articles on antiques. These are not given as "what to think" material, but as a starting point of "how to think" significance in respect of spool, button and ball-turned furniture.

Book Reviews

Two Hundred Years of American Blown Glass, by Helen and George S. McKearin, Doubleday & Co., N. Y., $15, 1950.

THIS book certainly gets off on the right foot. It is authored by the two people best fitted by experience and inclination to do justice to the subject of American blown glass, and it is sponsored by a publisher whose experience includes the first definitive work on American antiques, issued in the year 1900.

Perhaps the most gorgeous, the most glorious, the finest and the most desirable objects in American blown glass are pictured in this book in ten color plates and one hundred four velvety black and whites. The volume, which is quite generous in size, measuring 8½ x 11 inches, fulfills a long-felt want on the part of all advanced collectors of glassware and the vast number of coming collectors. It is more ably arranged than the authors' other work, American Glass, and, at first glance, is apt to overawe the amateur with the rich and rare quality of the many examples pictured. There is nothing common, at least nothing that looks common, displayed in this latest book by the McKearins.

The text covers, at some length, the history of American glass houses as stepping stones in the achievement of constantly better glasswares down through the years. The treatment is chronological, by periods, such as Colonial (prior to 1780), the 1780-1800 era, or early Federal, the 1800 to 1830 period, designated by the authors as the critical period, and the special notice of historical and pictorial flasks, individual 19th century pieces, and, finally, the renaissance of fine glass-making as represented in the masterpieces of today.

The field of American glass offers so many opportunities of purposeful collecting, of categories within the field of glass, whether by types of glass, color of glass or kind of glass, that one wishes the McKearins had also added a chapter on this important phase for the collectors of today and tomorrow.

A most admirable technique, typical of recent Doubleday books, is the facing of every page of pictures with the captions applying to them.

A close study of the text of this work reveals some few missteps, some near misses, and some clear misses, and the occasional tendency of the authors to follow traditional beliefs rather than enter new fields of research in respect of the already known and well-tabulated glassmakers. Certainly a volume of this importance should not repeat the ancient errors of belief regarding the sources of Stiegel's inspiration, the nationality of his glassmakers, and the fanfare about Amelung, which has led many to believe that Amelung's Maryland glass was equal to Germany's production of his time. Amelung emphatically did not produce glass equal to that made in Germany. Whether this is because

Historical Blue

by L. G. Van Nostrand

Historical China comes in a variety of colors, — black, sepia, purple, pink, green and various shades of blue. The views are either historical, literary, or decorative. Included here are the literary and decorative views as historical because many collectors and dealers are classifying them as such.

The china showing American views and American events were for the American trade and included, "The Landing of Lafayette Series" by Clews, "Hudson River Views" by Clews, "The Beauties of America Series" by Ridgway, "American Views" by Adams, "American Views" by Jackson, "Arms Series" by Mayer, "Boston State House Series" by Rogers, "States Series" by Clews and many individual pieces showing important events in American history.

The "Doctor Syntax Series" by Clews is an example of the literary views series, depicting as it does the adventures of Doctor Syntax.

The decorative views series would include Palestine, Andalusia and others. The pink is particularly pleasing and can be used to advantage for decorative purpose.

The articles manufactured included, platters of various sizes, plates, cup plates, cups and saucers, covered vegetable dishes, open vegetable dishes, handled gravy boats, tea and coffee pots, salt and pepper shakers, tureens, bowls and other miscellaneous articles.

The "Historical China" of this article was made in Staffordshire, England. The potteries were located in a narrow section of the country, only a few miles in length.

Important manufactories were located in Burslem, Etruria, Shelton, Stoke-on-Trent, Hanley, Cobridge, Tunstall and other localities. Important manufacturers were, Enoch Wood, Ralph and James Clews, John and William Ridgway, Andrew Stevenson, Ralph Stevenson, Joseph Stubbs, William Adams and Sons, John and Job Jackson, Charles Meigh, others and some makers which we will classify as unknown. China made by some of these unknow makers is highly historical and offers the student ample opportunity for original research.

The above text was written to give the reader a general background regarding historical china as a study and the remainder of the article will deal specifically with the blue.

The blue china is regarded as the most attractive of all historical china and is the most popular with the average collector. The blue is rich and brilliant, the transfers expertly applied and the appearance pleasing. A background of blue plates in your old cupboard gives the whole room an atmosphere of good taste and satisfaction.

For American trade the scenes were American, depicting famous scenery, buildings, ships, early locomotives, battles and scenes glorifying Washington and Lafayette. The data for reproducing these scenes was secured by sending British artists to America.

The architectural views are extremely important to the student of our early history. In many cases the pictures on the pottery are the only reputable views of our early nineteenth century buildings. Some of the pottery was coarse and heavy, but the brilliant color and attractive scenes made one forget the crudity.

The popularity of Lafayette was second to that of Washington and the love and esteem in which he was held by the American people has persisted down through the years.

In 1824 when he visited America for the second time he received such a tremendous ovation that the famous "Landing of Lafayette Series," was made at the Clews pottery. This series is very popular with collectors. The design is very attractive, many articles were made and these are generally found in fine condition.

Illustration No. 1. is of a 10" plate in this series. The inscription at the bottom reads "Landing of Gen. Lafayette at Castle Garden, New York, 16th August 1824." The color is excellent, the transfer was applied with skill and care. The shades of blue show correct contrast and the general composition of the picture is very good. It is said that the large boat at the left was the Chancellor Livingston.

Illustration No. 2 shows a 9" plate made by Enoch Wood, Burslem. On the back of this plate is an eagle with out-spread wings, and a floating banner with the inscription "E Pluribus Unum" is held in its beak. An American shield is at the right and underneath is the caption "Gilpin's Mills on the Brandywine Creek." This is another Lafayette item. He was wounded at the battle of the Brandywine and was carried to the farm house of Gideon Gilpin. Although this plate has the famous shell border of Enoch Wood, it is not particularly attractive in appearance, but because of historical significance it is an important item.

Different potteries used various borders such as flowers, foliage, scrolls, or a combination was quite common. Distinctive borders were the shell border of Wood, eagle and scroll of Stubbs, and the oak leaf and acorn of Ralph Stevenson and Williams.

Illustration No. 3

Illustration No. 3 shows a 10" plate with the eagle and scroll border used by Stubbs. The scene is "Fair Mount near Philadelphia," and pictures the Fairmount water works. The composition is good with the tree and period figures in the foreground relieving the monotony of the rest of the scene. The color is attractive and shows the proper amount of contrast. Evidently the view of Fairmount was popular. Currier and Ives made a print in later years called "Fairmount Water Works near Philadelphia." The views were taken from different points and, although not identical, are similar.

In my opinion the most beautiful border is the shell border used by Enoch Wood. It comes in two types; the regular where the scene is framed by a circle, and the grotto where the outline framing the central theme is irregular. Wood made many beautiful pieces of dark blue china, the transfers were expertly applied, the color brilliant and he usually used a composition of scene that was beyond criticism.

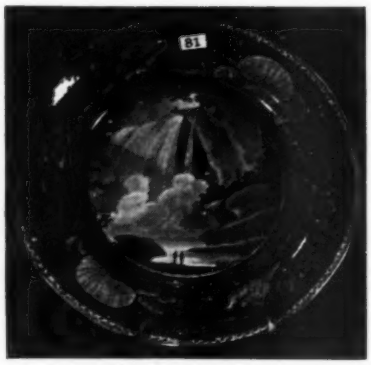

Illustration No. 4

Illustration No. 4 is one of the most attractive plates using the shell border. The plate shows "Table Rock, Niagara." It is typical of the masterful use of composition by Wood. The shell border spells water. The small figures in the foreground and the tiny figures on the rock at the top give the feeling of great heighth and the clouds of mist give the impression of a tremendous cascade of water. Truly a great picture and evidently made by an artist of distinction.

Well, the rock is no more. As the story goes, a man drove his horses and wagon up on the rock, in order to wash the wagon. He heard the rock cracking and hastily removed the horses to safety. The wagon and rock fell into the water far below. I have never been able to satisfy myself as to how he had the time to unhitch the horses and remove them from the rock. However it is a good story and I can't disprove it.

It has been said that the Staffordshire potters were the Currier and Ives of their time. They made pottery picturing many British scenes and buildings. Like Currier and Ives, they did not hesitate to show the great disasters of the day.

Take for example the plate shown in Illustration No. 5. It is a 10" plate made by Wood employing the shell border in the grotto motif. The inscription at the bottom reads "The Kent East Indiaman." The scene re-

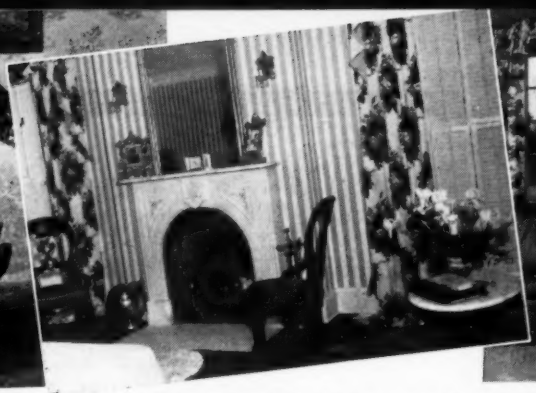
On vacation in paternal home, Gene relaxes on a carved rosewood heirloom sofa.



Victorian furniture is the theme in the Cassinis' bedroom. The mantel is adorned with family portraits in silver frames, the marble topped table with iris in a hobnail vase.

The simple comfort of the Cassini living room depicts richness in the valuable Bow, Chelsea, and other figurines. Early American clock graces mantel; student lamp, table below; and pine cones, ready to burn, are stored in brass bin on floor.

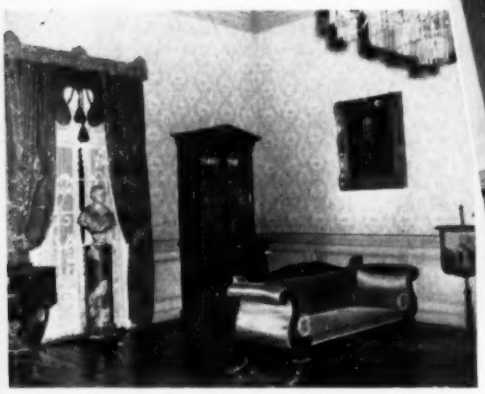
Antiques Star with the Stars

the Gene Tierney (Cassini) Collection

by KATHERINE J. JUSTH BAROSS

Being a countess and motion picture star does not stop Gene Tierney from donning gingham and caring for her Antiques properly.



The Eastern mansion of the Tierney family which is decorated with family heirlooms.

IN Lausanne, Switzerland, where sonorous bells cling-clang into the azure and pure alpine air thrice a day, at the Brillantmont finishing school for young ladies with family advantages, a little American girl, Gene Eliza Tierney, started her first collection. Post cards, of course, and small trinkets, among which were penguin figurines. She still keeps her penguins among other collections in her California home today, after having reached stardom in the Hollywood filmworld. The collection of Early Americana, porcelain, silver, and antique furniture developed from this first interest.

Postcards for her first collection came to Lausanne mostly from America, mainly her hometown in New York. She kept these tucked fanlike, on folding wireracks that may be found on the wall above the white enamelled steelbeds in every boarding school of Central Europe where young ladies of well-to-do families sojourn for a rather expensive finishing education.

The fine antique circular painting on glass (over table) was a gift to Gene from her husband, Count Oleg Cassini in the early days of their romance. The bronze and marble French lamp stands on a book case holding early editions of the classics of the stage.

About twenty in number in each such school, these young students are walked in pairs daily to museums, libraries, once a week to church, concerts, and the theatre. As a rule they go with a French governess, the smallest student leading, while the English governess with the tallest student on her side closes these minor processions.

On these visits young Miss Tierney was fascinated by the theater. The classics that were offered on stage to the students found deep response in her soul. At Brillantmont she took active part in their school plays. The improvised stage was so small that one had to move around with care; nevertheless it was a stage, and efforts brought applause.

In the American schools she studied at St. Margaret's in Waterbury, Conn., and Miss Porter's in Farmington, Conn. Little Gene Eliza took active part in all dramatics, her talent carrying her. For three generations something had been stirring in the blood of the female side of the Tierney family. Her grandmother and mother before her had nursed aspirations for the stage, but the male Tierneys had always stopped it.

The nearest any of them had come to realizing their desires was her grandmother. On a pleasure trip, back in the nineties Gene's grandfather and grandmother were on the boat going to Europe, when Daniel Frohman, theatrical producer, offered to put elegant and attractive Mrs. Tierney on the stage. Again the husband would not agree.

When Gene, through with her education, had the same idea, her father, Howard S. Tierney, exercised the usual male Tierney prerogative, but he figured he could do it through the modern psychological approach. Instead of shouting a flat "No!" he offered to accompany "Squid" (his nickname for daughter Gene), in her search for stage roles.

To his amazement an interview with George Abbott brought a contract, with a part in a play on the New York stage. Miss Tierney had little acting experience, yet 20th Century Fox spotted her early and and took her to Hollywood.

Her small Lausanne penguin collection came with her and today is kept in a fine inlaid rosewood vitrine with other grotesque ceramic pengum figurines, some of which are of valuable make collected during her nine years of stardom.

Rising rapidly to stardom in 1940, the following year, on June 2, 1941, Gene Tierney married Count Oleg Cassini, the noted designer, of Russian ancestry from Italy. To have a home harmonizing with their true personality, the young bride chose antique furnishings, including much Early Americana. Gene is happy and comfortable here, with her husband and their two charming small daughters, Daria, born October 15, 1943, and Christina, born Nov. 19, 1948.

Gene has as much fun visiting junk shops, and if she cannot locate real antiques, she frequently buys some object if for no other reason than to satisfy the dealer.

The interior of a home mirrors the attitude and character of its inhabitants. Love of tradition is marked by the antique Spinning Wheel that Gene, Countess Cassini keeps in her favorite room, where she spends most of her time. "Boudoir" was the Victorian name for such a room, but how could one use this twisted misnomer for a place laden with the fine Early Americana Gene has collected. The style is not followed rigidly in all pieces. There is a comfortably upholstered Victorian arm chair in which Gene likes to nestle because it reminds her of the furniture of her childhood days.

We noted Gene mixes specimens of several different periods in one room. This habit came from the fact that the Tierneys kept all their inherited furniture (accumulated from past generations) in their family home, with no special period devoted to one room. Gene sees the individual beauty of the pieces, and during her browsings with her husband, they have acquired the specimens they like best for their new home.

"I like to visit antiques shops, here on the West Coast or wherever I travel," Gene Tierney stated, "and I like to take good care of my antiques. I dust them, clean them, while I enjoy the beauty of each piece we chose for our California home."

Front and back of one of the "Light House Series" cards.

Cigarette Cards

by Dena Wilt

MOST children are born collectors. Usually their "treasures" are worthless, but sometimes a collection, found in later years, proves interesting and of value.

Such a collection was unearthed recently, while cleaning an attic. Several hundred cigarette cards, saved almost fifty years ago by a little boy.

No doubt many will remember these colorful cards of the early 1900's. They were inclosed in packages of cigarettes as premiums, much the same as the milk glass hens, jam jars etc. were given away with mustard.

Though these cards appealed primarily to children, the idea was a form of sales promotion.

At that time most men rolled their own cigarettes. The cards evidently were intended as an added inducement to buy them already rolled.

The cigarette manufacturers were shrewed enough to realize that children love to collect. They undoubtedly counted on the influence a youngster might have in persuading Dad or big brother to buy a certain brand of cigarette to get a wanted picture.

The cards, covering a wide variety of subjects, were printed in series, and once a collection of a particular group was started, there was the urge to complete that group.

Some of the cards had the number of the series printed on the back. Also the number of pictures in that particular series. On others there was printed the number of the edition. Sometimes full framed sets were offered for a nominal sum. Thus, there might be a notation on the back of a card, reading—"Prize Fight Series. No. 101-25 Subjects. A Full Set Framed Will Be Sent On Receipt Of $1.00" Or—"College Series 1-25 2nd Edition." These notations, of course made it easy to check a collection of a particular group and know when it was complete.

Started in the 1880's, the distribution of these pictures caused a collector's craze that had swept the country by the turn of the century. Adults as well as children were enthusiasts.

By 1915 the variety of subjects seemed endless. Most of the important people in the United States had been pictured on cigarette cards.

Some of the most popular subjects were printed and distributed by several companies. "Baseball Players", for instance, were inclosed in packages of Lenox, American Beauty, and Sweet Caporal Cigarettes, to name a few. They were also given away with packages of candy at that time. These 16" Terra Cotta jardiniere $9.50.

Large painted portrait of lady $8.50.

Smaller painted portrait of boy $6.50.

Irish Belleek teapot and open sugar $15 set.

Staffordshire match box with picture in bottom $12.50.

cards were much sought after by boys; also "Heroes of History" which came with Royal Bengal Little Cigars, and the "World's Greatest Explorers", premiums in Hassan Cigarettes around 1910. "Prizefighters", and "Indian Life In The '60s", also found in the Hassan packages, were popular.

Collecting these little cigarette cards was not only an interesting hobby, but it had an educational value as well. Most of the pictures of famous people had thumbnail biographies printed on the back. And where it might have been a boring duty to learn about these people through required reading, to collect the cards and acquaint themselves with the biographies was interesting pastime.

Also in the educational line was the "Lighthouse" series, which gave folks, young and old, an opportunity to learn something about the famous lighthouses.

Few small cities could boast a zoo, and many children never had a chance to see wild animals except in pictures. The "Wild Animal" series made it possible for them to become familiar with many different species. The "Reptile" and "Bird" series fell into this category. These four latter groups were put out by Hassan.

Sweet Caporal also had educational cards, among the subjects, the "Fish" series, and the "Flags of all Nations".

"Famous Homes" were accurately described. Interesting bits of information about western life were related on the backs of the "Cowboy" series. And there was much to be learned regarding Indians and their habits from the "Indian Life in the '60s" series.

"Champion Athletes", "Champion Pool and Billiard Players", "Champion Golfers", "Auto Drivers",

PEPPERMINT HOUSE

New Zealand flag, one of the 150 cards of the "Flags of All Nations Series." Advertisement of Jack Rose, Little Cigars.

"Champion Bowlers", etc. were inclosed in packages of Mecca cigarettes. The Mecca company also featured a "Baseball Folder" series much in demand.

Mogul came out with a "Toast" series, and "Birthday Horoscopes".

Appropriately, it was the manufacturers of Between the Acts Little Cigars that brought out a series of "Theatres, Old and New", and the "Actors" series. But other manufacturers turned to the theatre for their inspiration, too, among them the makers of Fatima cigarettes, who came out with a series of picures of famous actresses.

The manufacturers were advanced in their use of sales psychology, for again they were approaching the adult through the child by introducing the "Jig-Saw Scenes". Most children are interested in working puzzles, and no doubt urged their fathers to buy the packages of cigarettes containing the jig-saws.

Small children always like stories, so perhaps with this in mind, the "Fable" series appeared. In addition to the pictures, there was a summarized fable on the back of the card, and undoubtedly there was much urging on the part of the children for these particular brands.

Some of the cards, such as the "Baseball Players", "Prize-fighters", "Auto Drivers", etc. printed records of the men they pictured. These appealed to the boys in their early teens, who might have had dreams of someday becoming famous too, in the same vocations.

Many of these collections are still in existence. Some probably tucked away by the original owners, but others must have found their way into antiques shops.

A hobby as popular as this one was at the time the cards were printed, should be fascinating today. These same cigarettes cards are now collector's items, and there's the added zest of tracking down a desired object that's a little difficult to find.

The Confusing Periods

PART III — CONCLUSION

"The So-Called Periods"

by A. A. Halstead

NOW let us consider some of the inexact period names mentioned in Part I of this series. To some, the words "Colonial Furniture" mean primitive or crudely constructed pieces. These interpretations are not necessarily correct since some of the finest, most carefully constructed pieces in existence were made by Colonial craftsmen.

So-called "Colonial Period"

Since America was "Colonial" until the signing of the Declaration of Independence, we can not use the word "Colonial" as a period designation, if we are to have period designations mean anything. No period designation is of value when the years it includes number two hundred. Several different periods lived and died while America was Colonial. Therefore, because the word is not specific in meaning, Colonial should not be used to identify any piece of furniture as to style or date of making.

So-called "Georgian Period"

The word "Georgian" is also of doubtful meaning when used as a period name. It can not properly refer to British Royalty for there were Georges on the throne of England from 1713 until 1830. They reigned successively for 117 years and certainly no one furniture style persisted for so long a time. The styles of the Queen Anne, Chippendale, Hepplewhite and Sheraton periods all flourished and died out during the reign of the Georges.

There are some who refer to the later years of the Queen Anne period and the early years of the Chippendale period as the "Georgian" period. This would incline one to believe that entirely different designs were offered and widely used during these years. Such is not the case. It is true that the designs of the Queen Anne period did undergo certain refinements as the years of the period progressed. The changes, however, were minor in nature and the basic design elements remained constant in form. To assign a separate period name to cover minor changes in design, is to further obscure an already rather foggy picture.

Therefore the term "Georgian" is not specific enough to be of real value as a period designation. To say that a piece is "Georgian" is like describing a town as being located west of the Mississippi. A traveller, so directed, would have a difficult time in locating the town. The collector will also have a difficult time in identifying a piece of "Georgian" furniture.

So-called "Federal Period"

The two decades following the adoption of the Constitution (1789-1810), are sometimes referred to as the "Federal" period. But, was there such a period in the accepted sense of the word? No single group of designs dominated the "Federal" scene, for the designs of Hepplewhite, Sheraton, Adam and Phyfe were enjoying popularity at the time. And, we already have names for the most popular groups, the Hepplewhite and the Sheraton.

The eagle motif in art, carving and appliqued work was widely used during the "Federal" years. But, should we single out one popular motif and create a new period name to indicate its span of popularity? If we were to do that, our list of period names would become limitless.

In conclusion it will be helpful to bring to the collector's attention certain facts relative to furniture design which are not widely publicized. There is the point that heavy forms alternated with light forms. For example; Queen Anne forms were light; Chippendale forms were heavy; Hepplewhite light, as were the overlapping Sheraton; the Empire forms were heavy; and finally the light forms of the Victorian came into style.

Another point is that the strip above the top drawer of Chests of drawers that date from the Hepplewhite period forward to the Victorian period, were made wider and wider as the years progressed. We note the very narrow top strip on the Hepplewhite piece and the four inch strip on the chest made just before the Victorian influence came in. This matter of the widening of the strip above the top drawer will serve as a guide to the collector who encounters freaks and transition style pieces.

Transition pieces are those in the design of no true period but, consist of forms taken from the designs of two or more periods. They were made during the declining years of one period and the peak popularity years of a succeeding period. An example is the early 1800 chest of drawers that is true Hepplewhite except for the width of the strip above the top drawer and the round turned Empire period feet that support it. We may assume that they came into being under the following circumstances. Mrs. Jones ordered the local village cabinet maker to build a cherry chest of drawers. The craftsman had been trained in Hepplewhite designs and at first intended to construct a true Hepplewhite. But, Mrs. Jones having recently seen an Empire chest of drawers with sturdy round turned feet, decided that her new chest had to be right up to date, and insisted on the newest form of chest support. The cabinet maker complied with the customer's request and created a transition piece that was later to become a real problem in furniture identification. Satisfying the customer often presents a problem. Does it not?

Illustration No. 6

Illustration No. 6 shows a 7½" plate by Wood. The inscription reads as follows—"Commodore MacDonnough Victory" (the inscription is exactly as printed on the plate). Note the small figures on the shore, one of which is looking at the battle through a telescope. If you have imagination you can see that they are quite composed and are enjoying the scene of conflict.

Now is the time to do a little work in research. Read about MacDonnough's victory. Ascertain the number of ships that were engaged in the naval battle and try to place them in the scene. An historical antique whether it is a piece of china or a piece of old glass must offer the opportunity of research. This makes collecting a real joy.

Illustration No. 7 shows a plate in the "State Series" made by Clews. It is vivid and striking in appearance. Fifteen states are represented and the central scene is framed with scrolls.

dallion of Washington. Underneath is written "America and Independence." The Staffordshire potters were shrewd and smart and did not hesitate to advertise American liberty and American victories over the British.

During Washington's time Free Masonry was powerful and important and therefore it is not strange that the potters capitalized on this fact in the decoration of their pottery.

It is utterly impossible to cover historical blue china in one article. If you are contemplating the starting of a collection I would advise the purchase of plates. A few really nice plates make a nice collection, they are easily housed and are highly decorative. I am extremely partial to the shell border of Enoch Wood. This border is to be found on both American and British views. As a rule the plates showing American views are more expensive than the British, although many of the English views are more attractive than the American.

at most antiques shows. However there is a considerable amount hidden away, its value unknown to the owner.

I was amazed to find that a friend of ours had a very complete set of blue china showing the Boston State House by Rogers. It consisted of plates, cups and saucers, coffee and tea pots, soup tureen, ladle and tray, open and covered vegetable dishes, platters and soup plates. Her children did not want it so she stored it in her attic. What a find for someone, some day.

Illustration No. 9

Characteristic of the many beautiful plates showing English views is the 8½" dark blue plate (Illustration No. 9) picturing Dartmouth, England. Plates having English and foreign scenes are generally lower in price than plates bearing American views and scenery. However, an occasional piece with an American scene may be found that is underpriced. This could be added to your collection. Price is always subject to argument, but to give a general idea of value, it is safe to say that the plates shown in these illustrations would be priced from $16.00 to $25.00. These prices would be for plates in mint or fine condition, free from cracks, scratched transfers and checks. A damaged plate commands a damaged price.

It has only been possible to give a very brief outline of "Historical Blue China." It is a subject of unlimited scope and one could spend a small fortune in assembling a collection. However, great expense is not necessary. A few attractive plates make a nice collection.

he could not or would not, or whether he was convinced his American market would not buy such folderols, is beside the point. Amelung did not produce the equivalent of fine German glass. This is not to say he did not produce it because he did not have the opportunity. By some strange streak of stupidity, Amelung, and others in his venture, could not grasp the opportunity that was handed to them on a platter. They failed because better glass, made at Bristol, England, was entering the port of Baltimore to compete with the Amelung product at lower prices on the dock than Amelung could produce his wares for at his Maryland factory.

Perhaps such idol-smashing is purposely avoided by the McKearins. They live in a world of glass — their new book is a mansion of glass. When one is so domiciled, we understand, one should not throw stones.

Two Hundred Years of American Blown Glass is certainly a must for your bookshelf if you have old glass, collect old glass, or buy and sell old glass. At the prices of old glass today, you need deny yourself but one insignificant piece to own this book, with its richness of pictures and text.

American Silver, by John Marshall Phillips, Chanticleer Press, N. Y., 1949, $4.00.

HERE is a volume displaying the acme of perfection achieved by American silversmiths whose work is within the category of antiques. The explanation of the various styles followed by the silversmiths is accomplished with great clarity.

It is assumed to be an excellent educational device to inculcate respect and admiration for a subject. This monograph on American silver is an excellent example of such education. Therefore few, if any, serious collectors can afford to be without this book, not in spite of, but because of its emphasis on the rich, rare and almost unobtainable elegancies that mark the mastery of their craft of our most famous silversmiths.

The pictorial appeal of this volume is direct to that quality of mind that is considered connoisseurship—to the advanced collector. The illustrations are beautifully done by a process similar to offset, but there are four plates in color which include beautiful portraits of Paul Revere, the patriot silversmith, and of Nathaniel Hurd who, while not as famous, was certainly a better silversmith than Revere. There is a colored plate of a covered cup by Jacob Hurd, and another plate of gold jewelry and spoons.

Some students will take issue with Dr. Phillips, who is curator of the Garvan Collection at Yale and Director of the Yale University Art Gallery, on his contention that the use of Sterling as a designation of quality is not commonly found on American silver until after 1860, with the possible exception of Baltimore silver of the 1810-1814. Many students know that the designation "sterling" was used by some Philadelphia silversmiths of the 1810-1330 period.

This is a beautifully printed volume, and in light of its content and illustrations, is modestly priced. But one cannot help but think that beautiful as this and other volumes on silver have been, there still remains unfulfilled the collector's most crying need —a book dealing with American silver of the kind the average collector can procure; a book dealing with the silver that many people have; a book which, dealing with all our silversmiths down to the year 1800, pays particular attention to the silversmiths of the first half of the 19th century, working from 1801 to 1850.

American Glass and Glassmaking, by Lura Woodside Watkins, The Chanticleer Press, N. Y., 1950, $2.95.

THIS monograph is one in the excellent American Crafts series, edited by Charles Nagel, Director of the Brooklyn, New York, Museum. There are four fine plates in color and fifty-one in black and white by monochromatic offset, 102 pages of text and front matter, and a two-page list of books on glass and important public collections. The eight chapters which constitute the book cover glass and its manufacture, the pioneer glasshouses, America's first flint glass, flint glass of the early 19th century, the bottle and window-glass houses, pressed glass, Victorian blown glass and modern glass. There is no index and, because of the monographic quality of the book, perhaps none is needed. This book is low-priced enough for any collector's bookshelf but it is not a "cheap" book; it is done throughout in the tradition of expensive volumes which, all too frequently, are beyond the average collector's purse.

Just how much of this book is the result of original research and how much is a recitation of uncorrected previous errors need not concern the students and collectors of old glass in the American scene. Perusal of the volume from an analytic viewpoint reveals it to be a mixture of both, with dominant emphasis on original research. Mrs. Watkins is noted for her original research work on Boston and Cambridge glass. Therefore, it comes as something of a shock to find repeated in her book the sheer invention that Caspar Wistar was a German "who migrated to this country in 1717 . . . . and in the 18th century the greater number of our glassblowers were of Germanic origins and it is to Germany we must look for stylistic influence in much of our good early glass." This has been designated as nonsense by one of the foremost glass experts of Germany, who has said he searched everywhere for the alleged birthplace of Casper Wistar and found it not—the name is not German, and that few, if any, German glassblowers migrated to the colonies. Mrs. Watkins has perhaps assumed that the vociferous claims of pro-German groups in Pennsylvania were the plain, unvarnished truth.

But this need not and should not cause a question of any sort in respect of those fields of glass study in which Mrs. Watkins is on sure ground, and sure of it. She has done considerable fact-finding in the field of pressed glass and who made it first. And the fact of her lapse in respect of the Germanic origins of 18th century glass is not too serious, largely because there is so little of this glass available for present-day collectors. But whether or not, as the author suggests, Wistar's workmen were German (even though they were hired from and sailed from the Netherlands), the fact remains that the output of the Wistar works was in the Dutch and not the German tradition.

There are comparable lapses in the Stiegel story; not the second nor the twenty-second, but perhaps the one thousand and twentieth retelling of the Stiegel legends . . . most of which, too, are inventions, but not the author's. Beyond these, the story told is good, and perhaps the misinformation repeated in respect of Wistar and Stiegel is the spice needed for a dish of strong meat about our other glass factories of later date, who made most of the glass collected today.

Meet "The Spinning Wheel" Advertisers Face-To-Face

This is the last in a series of seven features introducing Spinning Wheel advertisers to their customers and fellow dealers. Earlier issues containing the first six parts can be obtained on request to THE SPINNING WHEEL, Dept. F8, Taneytown, Maryland. Send 20¢ for each issue desired, or $1.00 for the six.

MRS. WARREN SWARTZ

Swartz's Antique Shop — Michigan

The use of "Buy-Ways" plus intermittent classified advertising have helped this dealer supplement her regular shop sales. The grocery business occupies Mr. Swartz's time and Mrs. Swartz has conducted her own antiques business (a separate) venture for two years. Like other successful advertisers, she enjoys The Spinning Wheel enough to associate her friends and customers with it also.

MRS. WILLIAM T. STROM

Antiques — Ohio

As a youngster Mrs Strom entered the antiques business on the North Side of Chicago in 1927 and has continued it through her marriage in 1928 (when she moved to Ohio) to now. In the '30's her selling was chiefly by mail, via price lists. In the last eight years no lists have been issued, but rather the majority of sales are effected through direct advertising. She enjoys the SPINNING WHEEL contacts made in her two years advertising, and finds "direct from home" sales of her large general stock quite satisfying.

MRS. GEORGE W. NIGH

Show Manager — New Jersey

Although not a dealer, she is a friend to many dealers and collectors through her untiring efforts for the past two years in making the Jersey City Women's Club Antiques Shows highly successful. Careful attendance to detail and intelligent application of her experience and observations, make Mrs. Nigh an outstanding non-professional show manager. — a Bradford Bachrach photo

EMMA C. STEPHENS

Antiques — Pennsylvania

Mrs. Stephens is an "old-timer", in the antiques business at least, having been in business fifteen years. A two story building filled with a choice selection, including a nice line of dolls awaits her customers. Of particular importance to Mrs. Stephens, as is to all Spinning Wheel advertisers, is the fact of her entire stock being old and authentic.

MRS. WALTER H. ZWILLING

Eleven Oaks Hobby Shop — Indiana

Twelve years in business and three years of Spinning Wheel advertising, this dealer reports, "I have received so many letters from my advertising and they are from such nice people. It is a pleasure to serve them."

craftsmen were imported from Bohemia, England, France, and the original coast factories, thus, quality merchandise was produced from the first. Today, homemakers, scattered in every state of our nation, cherish pitchers, bowls, or artistic objects like Grandmother's Dominecker which attest to the skill of these workmen.

In a wholesaler's catalogue of 1890 I found lists of Farm Yard Pieces advertised. These included molded lions, fish, wagons, lambs, hens, ducks and roosters. Even a round bowl topped with a bust of Jenny Lind and another of Grover Cleveland were included in the "Farm Yard" set.

About the time grandmother started housekeeping, in the latter quarter of the nineteenth century, entire table settings of a given pattern were being manufactured. Milk-white opaque was the first choice of the public for these glass sets, with sky-blue and emerald running a close second.

Many modern homemakers, like Mrs. H. J. Herber, of Longmont, lend zest to daily living and grace to their homes by collecting these old patterns. Sawtooth, Tulip, and Thumbprint are considered among the earliest patterns. Blackberry pattern is much desired because its design was patented in February, 1870, by William Leighton, and the glass used in this pattern was of extra fine composition. Closely following this came Sheaf of Wheat, Daisy and Button, Strawberry, and Sunflower.

These old dishes, reflecting the mode and custom of olden days are equally at home in smart modern apartments. The "shaped hands" dish on the third shelf from the top in the photograph, was designed to hold the calling cards of friends, but today gives a striking note to flower and fruit arrangements. Easter celebration for the Delbridge family of Greeley, Colorado, means gathering for lunch at Aunt Lucys where soup is served from her eighteen covered "Farm Yard" bowls.

Fruit nappy on a standard with Finecut Base, owned by Mrs. Frank Terriere, Fort Morgan, Colo. The piece was a wedding gift of her mother's in the 1870's, presented by Canadian relatives who bought it in England.

Mystery is also found in collecting these pieces when one is found that defies duplication, such as the demi-john shown in the accompanying photograph. This Man on a Barrel is owned by Mr. and Mrs. Edward Simon, of Denver, Colorado, and though they are avid collectors and have traveled extensively over the United States in pursuit of their hobby, they have never seen anything to resemble the demi-john. Experts have not been able to shed light on its origin or history. Only the chalk white beauty of the glass and the perfection of design denote age and master craftsmanship.

Since Grandmother's Dominecker is an example of a craft that has endured for over four thousand years, tying these hurrying days to times when leisured workmen took pride in craft it has added meaning for me. Like women everywhere who cherish family keepsakes, its chief value is to remind me of a much loved woman and her homey sayings.
